BAR ADMISSIONS

North Carolina

Coalter Lathrop delivers a unique combination of international legal expertise and cartographic skills to support his boundary clients at the negotiating table and before the bench. He is among an elite group of lawyers who have litigated before the International Court of Justice and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, and his technical expertise and deep specialization set him apart from others in the field of public international law.

Lathrop has represented and advised sovereign states in land and maritime boundary disputes and provided negotiation support and advice on related issues to governments and private interests in Africa, Asia, the Middle East, and North and South America. He has published and presented extensively on the law of the sea, the Arctic, island sovereignty, and maritime boundaries. He serves as the editor of International Maritime Boundaries and has taught advanced international law courses at Duke Law.
